

SEBASTIAN COTOFANA, M.D., PH.D., PH.D.

■ Dr. Cotofana is an Associate Professor for Anatomy in the Department of Medical Education at Albany Medical College, Albany, New York, USA. He received his M.D. degree in 2008 from Ludwig-Maximilians-University, Munich, Germany.

His first Ph.D. degree in Medical Science is from Ludwig-Maximilians-University, Munich, Germany. He obtained his second Ph.D. in Anatomy from Paracelsus Medical University, Salzburg, Austria in 2015. After completing his residency in Trauma Surgery, Dr. Cotofana transitioned to basic sciences & research and moved to Ross University School of Medicine as an Associate Professor of Anatomy. In 2017, he moved to Albany, NY and joined the team at Albany Medical College.

In his scientific work, Dr. Cotofana specializes in anatomy, facial embryology and histology. He is an international speaker and Live-Dissector at many meetings, international conferences and workshops. Dr. Cotofana also serves as a reviewer for more than 10 scientific journals and has published more than 50 peer-reviewed articles and books.